This Prize was established in memory of H R Rodwell, a lecturer in the Department of Economics at The University of Auckland from 1928, who retired after many years as associate professor, in 1959. He had a special interest in economic history, as well as in student welfare, and contributed widely to public debate through his writing and talks, which commented on the economic issues of the day.

The main purpose of the Prize is to encourage students enrolled in the Honours programme to continue their postgraduate study in economics.
