Postgraduate Diploma in Information Governance (PGDipInfoGov)

Advance your knowledge and skills in information governance and enhance your effectiveness in managing information governance within organisations.

Quick facts

Programme type: Postgraduate

Points: 120

Duration: Part-time: 12 months (30 points per quarter) or up to 24 months (15 points per quarter)

Delivery: Auckland Online

What will I learn?

You will be exposed to the rapidly developing environment in which personal information is managed. You will gain knowledge and understanding of where rules governing data privacy and access to information are found and how they are applied in practice.

In addition, you will develop a strong platform of professional skills, which will enhance your capacity to adapt to the changing needs of business and government.

You will develop your ability to frame and analyse information governance issues and propose appropriate courses of action in context and take into account professional and ethical considerations related to privacy.

Through Auckland Online, you will be immersed in a rich, flexible and interactive learning environment that is designed to help you to learn and to develop professional skills in information governance.

Is this programme for me?

The PGDipInfoGov is designed for working professionals needing to upskill in this important field. It will also equip new and recent graduates for entry-level and junior management roles in similar fields.

You will need a degree in business or a relevant discipline, such as engineering, social sciences, sciences or technology with a GPA/GPE of 5.0 or higher to apply.

This programme is delivered fully online so you can study from anywhere in New Zealand. It is available for part-time study only and is open to domestic students only.

Note: The Postgraduate Certificate in Information Governance is a shorter qualification and can also be used as a pathway to further study in this subject at masters level.
