MEET

MOHAMED

The difference between school systems in New Zealand and Dr Mohamed Alansari's native Bahrain meant he needed to do a Foundation Studies programme in order to gain entry to a University of Auckland undergraduate course.

But Foundation Studies was just the beginning for Mohamed. After completing a Bachelor of Arts in Mathematics and Education, a first-class honours degree in Education, a Master of Arts in Education (also with first-class honours) and a PhD in the social psychology of education, Mohamed is still living in Auckland and is now a research fellow with the Quantitative Data Analysis and Research Unit in the Faculty of Education and Social Work at the University of Auckland.

As the principal evaluator of a longitudinal project 'I Have a Dream' (www.ihaveadream.org.nz), researching how to break the intergenerational cycle of poverty and influence student educational outcomes, Mohamed is living proof of where Foundation Studies can lead.

MEET TERI

Born in Fiji, Teri completed schooling to Year 12 but knew she wanted to attend the University of Auckland, so she moved to New Zealand and completed a University of Auckland Certificate in Foundation Studies Accelerated programme first.

"UP Education places importance on facilitating a young person's growth, not just as a student but as an independent functioning adult, which made my transition into the University of Auckland a seamless one."

Teri graduated with a Bachelor of Arts with a double major in Gender Studies and Politics/International Relations, a major influenced by her background.

"Growing up in the Pacific as an Asian immigrant fuelled my interest in studying social sciences. My experience sparked my drive to want to analyse and question the behaviour of society as a whole and think about what I could do to help shape and influence future societies."

Now working as a schools adviser at the University of Auckland, Teri reckons if you're thinking of going to university, don't worry about making hard career decisions now. Your first year at university will allow you to be flexible and change your mind numerous times.

"University is a time for you to create yourself and be the best version of yourself. So go explore and have fun doing it!"
