How to make your journal articles open access

1. Is the journal open access? Check doaj.org
   - Yes
     - Does the journal charge an article processing fee?
       - No
         - Does the journal offer open access for a fee?
           - Yes
             - Does the journal allow articles to be deposited in a repository? Check sherpa.ac.uk/romeo
               - Yes
                 - Upload and deposit the allowed version* into Research Outputs. researchoutputs.auckland.ac.nz
               - No
                 - Your work is only available to those institutions that subscribe to this journal.
             - No
               - A version of your work is freely available. Subscribers can see the published article.
               - Choose another journal that reaches your audience.
           - No
             - Your published article is freely available from the time of publication.
         - Yes
           - Choose another journal that reaches your audience.
   - No
     - Do you have the funds?
       - Yes
         - Your work is only available to those institutions that subscribe to this journal.
       - No
         - A version of your work is freely available. Subscribers can see the published article.

* Most publishers allow the author’s accepted version, i.e., the corrected version after peer review. Some journals make articles available after an embargo. Further information: library.auckland.ac.nz/openaccess